Background
In the past, Haines Junction was used by native people as a temporary staging area on trapping, hunting and fishing trips. The Southern Tutchone name for the area is Dakwakada, meaning "a high cache", which was erected near the present weigh scale station to store food and furs while hunting and fishing in the area.

The area was a trade route for the Tlingit and Chilkat Indians from Dalton Post to Ft. Selkirk. The Southern Tutchone acted as intermediaries in trade between coastal and interior Indians. Many of these trails were used as guides for the Haines and Alaska Highways. Pioneer Jack Dalton also used the trade route, which later became known as the Dalton Trail for his famous cattle drive to Dawson City.

After the building of the Alaska and Haines Highways, a maintenance camp was built at the junction. A small school was included in the camp for children of highway workers. The commercial potential of the area was recognized by John and Sally Backe who built the first café and motel in the area. Haines Junction now has several tourist accommodations and services.

As of June 1997, the population of Haines Junction was 862. It was predominantly a non-aboriginal community until the Department of Indian Affairs built houses for members of the Champagne and Aishihik First Nations just east of town.

First Nation Land Acreage and Status
Reserve Land: None.
Land Set Aside: Land Claims Settlement.
Parcels of Land Set Aside: None.

Land Claims and Self Government
The Champagne and Aishihik First Nations were the first to ratify their Band Final, Land Claims and Self Government Agreements.

Health Care
Haines Junction is served by a local community health centre, which offers two open clinics a day, Monday to Friday, and community health service every weekday afternoon. Emergencies are seen at any time. The community health nurse also covers Champagne and Canyon Creek. Haines Junction also has a locally-based social worker.

Social Services
The Champagne and Aishihik First Nation's social services program provides a number of services to its members in Haines Junction, Champagne, and Canyon Creek. These include counseling, court assistance, social assistance, adult and homemaker care, and community health care.

Community Justice
Alternative justice systems are provided by the local Haines Junction Community Justice Committee. The CAFN and the Justice Department collaborate in holding a Circle Court in Haines Junction. The CAFN has been delegated authority for care of First Nations children by the Yukon government and provides these services.

Police/ Fire
The RCMP operates a detachment in Haines Junction of one corporal and two constables (including one designated First Nations position), along with a part-time clerk. Native courtworker and probation services are provided from Whitehorse. Haines Junction has a volunteer fire department, and staff are trained in first aid and CPR. The Champagne and Aishihik First Nation also has fire halls and equipment located at Champagne and Canyon Creek.

The reported crime rate is equal to the number of reported Criminal Code and drug incidents per 100 residents. It is calculated as follows: the total number of Criminal Code and drug incidents reported in each RCMP detachment area in a given year is divided by the June population of the respective RCMP detachment area, and the result is multiplied by 100.
